

Collaborative Efforts with NGOs in Climate Adaptation Strategies

Universities and NGOs can collaborate to support climate adaptation initiatives by engaging local communities in identifying and addressing climate risks. This partnership can involve conducting community vulnerability assessments, identifying viable adaptation strategies, and implementing plans that enhance the capacity of communities to cope with the impacts of climate change.

Additionally, NGOs can offer universities crucial technical expertise in areas like ecosystem management, catastrophe risk reduction, and climate modeling, which can aid in the development of more successful climate adaptation plans. Universities and NGOs can collaborate to create and carry out programs for climate education and awareness-raising, as well as to offer training and capacity-building opportunities for nearby communities.

Collaboration between universities and NGOs can also help to ensure that adaptation efforts are integrated into broader development planning processes. By working together, universities and NGOs can advocate for policy and institutional changes that support climate adaptation and can develop innovative financing mechanisms to support adaptation projects.

Clean water awareness walk with NGO Lok Sung

The clean water awareness walk was organized by the students and faculty of the Department of Soil and Environmental Sciences, Faculty of Agriculture, on November 26, 2024, to highlight the importance of safe drinking water and the harmful effects of contamination. The walk proceeded from the campus to the water supply plant, with participation from the local community. Schools, colleges, and other faculties of the University of Poonch also joined. The walk not only underscored the value of clean water and the need to keep water reservoirs free from sewage contamination but also helped shape plans.
