

EVENTS FOR LOCAL FARMERS AND FOOD PRODUCERS

1: Department of Entomology conduct two days' workshop on Bee keeping

In the June 2024, The Department of Entomology at the University of Poonch, Rawalakot, recently organized a two-day workshop on European Beekeeping, specifically designed for women from the local community. The initiative aimed to empower female participants by enhancing their knowledge and skills in modern apiculture techniques, hive management, and sustainable honey production. Through a combination of interactive lectures, practical demonstrations, and hands-on training sessions, attendees gained valuable insights into the biology and behavior of European honeybees, disease management, and best practices for maintaining productive hives. The workshop also emphasized the economic and entrepreneurial potential of beekeeping, encouraging women to engage in income-generating activities that can contribute to both household income and community development. The event was met with enthusiasm and active participation, reflecting the department's commitment to community engagement, skill development, and the promotion of sustainable agricultural practices in the region.
